CITY BOYS HOLD SACK
FOR THE ELUSIVE SNIPE

Snipe hunting is a very ancient sport. It was thought to be dead until—well, there's the story.

About 10 o'clock on a recent night an automobile chugged over the hills south of Columbia with six very happy boys. There were three others—victims. One had bought the gasoline and cigarettes and insisted on singing all the songs his memory possessed.

Nine miles south of Columbia they stopped and turned the machine around. To go farther in the car would frighten the snipe, so they went on foot another mile until they reached a thicket near a small stream. Here instructions were given to the eager three on the art of bagging snipe. They must hold the bag open and stand quiet while the snipe were driven in.

One of the three did not have the necessary sack and was greatly worried. How would it be possible for him to catch snipe. A raincoat laid on the ground and held open with sticks solved the problem. Another declared his intention of cutting the heads off the snipe as they came in; he had brought his knife expressly for that purpose. The third was silently eager for the snipe to come chirruping into his sack.

The three were left close together. Two others went a little way down the stream to hold other sacks, and the rest departed to drive snipe.

It was a lonely vigil for the expectant three. The creaking of bullfrogs, the hoot of an owl far off, the chirruping of crickets and katydids were all that broke the stillness of that night. In the meantime an automobile pounded rapidly over the road toward Columbia, and in it were six persons engaged in slapping one another on the back.

The six had fallen asleep smiling; the clock had struck twelve, one, two, and then three. There was a scraping on the porch and the sound of feet. The hall door burst open and the angry three tramped roughly up the stairs and rattled the doors. It was useless; the doors were locked.

All the participants live at 605 Sanford place. One of the victims was a graduate with a scholarship, another was from New York and the third from St. Louis.

"There is nothing like initiating city boys into that grand sport of snipe hunting," said one of the six.

BIG AUDIENCE HEARS
AUSTRALIAN PIANIST

Percy Grainger Opens Annual Phi Mu Alpha Series in Auditorium.

PROGRAM IS VARIED

Artist Gives Proceeds From Concerts to Red Cross—Is in Army Band.

A crowd that filled the University Auditorium greeted Percy Grainger, the Australian composer-pianist, who gave the opening program of the Phi Mu Alpha series for this year. For one hour and forty-five minutes the artist held his audience in attentive silence, as he gave a varied program comprising four numbers of his own composition. Much applause at the conclusion of each piece manifested the enthusiasm of the hearers and brought two encores.

Military precision characterized Mr. Grainger's dexterity and skill in the rendition of his selections. It was only natural that such should be the case, however, for Mr. Grainger is a member of the Fifteenth Coast Artillery Corps band stationed at Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn, in which he plays the saxophone.

"Rocco Resta, the director of that band is a young fellow but twenty-six years old, and I am sure he has a most wonderful musical career before him," said Mr. Grainger in an interview after the concert.

Resta a Great Band Leader.

Absently forgetting queries relating to military and other matters put to him, the pianist walked to and fro in the stage entry in deep absorption only to wheel around occasionally and emphasize the fact that it is a great thing to be able to work with a great band leader like Resta.

"I think good inspiring music is an essential thing for the good of the soldiers at times like these. Mr. Resta and I have arranged lots of work for the Red Cross and Miss Margaret Wilson, the President's daughter, and myself gave several concerts in the interest of the American Red Cross in the New England states last month. She is a delightful singer.

"Nobody can tell what will be done with our band," replied Mr. Grainger when asked if he expected to do service in the trenches. "I was excused on a leave of absence for three months to give concert in behalf of the Red Cross and all my proceeds not necessary for traveling expenses go to that organization. I have been away from New York a month and before I complete my trip will go as far west as Denver and Austin, Tex."

The genuine cordiality and courtesy of Mr. Grainger impresses one. Dodging questions referring to self, he quickly turns to the topics on which he appears so deeply interested—Resta, Australia, England, America.

He Likes America.
"I think there is an affinity between Australia, my native country, and America because of their similarity of ideals, commerce, and other things, don't you?" inquired the composer. "I always enjoy playing, but especially so for the English and American people," he continued, "for to them the ordinary music has an appeal as well as the more exceptional flights of art."

"I don't see why the people emphasize the technical side of music anyhow, for music is as simple and as necessary to life as eating and drinking." Mr. Grainger was answering the interviewer's statement that he need not expect to read a criticism of his concert.

"I was ready to leave for Europe on my annual tour through England and the Scandinavian countries the day war was declared," said the man in khaki. "I am too enthusiastic about this country to leave it in time of stress, though, unless it is my duty to do so. Although I am a native Australian I have taken out my first naturalization papers here and expect to make America my home."

Since 5 years old Mr. Grainger has studied music. His mother began to teach him at that early period. He has been giving on the average of 130 concerts a season for the last fifteen years.

WRITES OF DAYS OF BOONE

Letter From Judge John F. Phillips Read at Banquet.

Judge John F. Phillips of Kansas City was unable to attend the formal opening of the Daniel Boone Tavern Saturday night but he wrote a characteristic letter which was read by E. W. Stephens, toastmaster of the banquet. Judge Phillips was born in Boone County. His letter follows:

"I deeply regret that conditions are such as to put beyond reasonable control my attendance at the banquet in celebration of the opening of the Daniel Boone Tavern. I am having a most unusual event in my domestic life, which cannot proceed to a finish very well without my active presence. For the first time in my married life I am moving in to rooms in a hotel to live; and as this movement is being made in an inseparable pair I am indispensable to its accomplishment. Nobody can be substituted in arranging an old man's room for his special occupancy. Long habit compels the exact place for his 'everything,' from his slippers to his dictionary, from his toothbrush to his copy of Shakespeare; and it is provocative of domestic rows if any of these be dislocated.

"My wife said to me this morning, when I told her I would have to decline your invitation, that in my old age I am showing unexampled devotion to home duty by letting go by an opportunity to make a speech, at a banquet!

"It would be an especial pleasure to me to join in doing honor to Daniel Boone. My father knew him personally. Around the family fireplace I listened to many rehearsals of the exploits and adventures of that remarkable frontiersman. It was within the borders of this territory that he found 'ample scope and verge enough' for indulging to the last his passion and fancy for the wilds. He selected Missouri territory for his abiding home when justice was denied him by the community in whose 'dark and bloody ground' he fought back the savage, and blazed out the paths, in the wilderness, for the coming of the higher civilization of Kentucky. Here he found, among its rugged pioneers the genuine, unaffected hospitality and good fellowship that gave joy and peace to his old age. Here he found sepulcher in the generous bosom of her soil. I have never become reconciled to what seemed to me a sacrilege in disturbing his bones and ashes and taking them out of this state to another state that neglected him while living.

"It is most fitting that in the capital city of the county named in his honor, the seat of the state's noblest education institution, noted for the hospitality, courtesy and pride of its citizens, should be erected a splendid hostelry, named in his honor. It is especially appropriate that this is called a 'tavern.' Such a sign would have invited old Daniel to enter, and order a haunch of venison, the legs of a wild turkey, a cut of thigh of a young bear, a hot cup of strong coffee and a tankard of foaming brew. I fear if the old path-finder, and the leather britches rifeman should look down upon the menu of that banquet in his honor it would little appeal to his memory of the 'eats' that put on edge his once keen appetite! Doubtless he can see, from his vantage ground, the old goad in the bubbling spring, gurgling over a hidden bottle, where he drank twice before resuming his quest of game.

"May the new tavern prove to be worthy of its name."
